FLEXIBLE law programs, a GREAT EDUCATION without breaking the bank, and a campus that’s a stone’s throw from Atlanta’s courthouses, the state Capitol and countless law offices. There’s a lot to love about Georgia State Law.
“The location is fantastic as well considering we’re within walking distance to the courthouses, the Capitol and numerous law offices.”

University of Georgia graduate Sarah Lathrop draws inspiration from many places. She had a double major at UGA. One was in biological sciences with a certificate in international agriculture; her other major was consumer journalism with a focus in public relations and fashion merchandising.

The Georgia Bulldog, who plans to practice personal injury law, considered many factors, ranging from value to location, when she began researching law schools. “Georgia State is rated a best-value law school, and I wholeheartedly agree. I couldn’t get a better education, regardless of price. The location is fantastic as well considering we’re within walking distance to the courthouses, the Capitol and numerous law offices.”

Sarah says it’s important for prospective law students to know themselves and to find a school where they’ll feel comfortable. “Law school isn’t easy so you need to be somewhere you can thrive. Georgia State is a top law school on a city campus. In addition, it’s a great deal, has a relatively small class, a great sense of community, a diverse student body, numerous programs — part time, full time and day, night, a high bar passage rate, and it’s located in the Southeastern hub. For me, I couldn’t have asked for anything more.”
